Experts say any easing of measures, whether internally or through border control, increases risks, and that Singapore could too soon relax if borders were not ready.

Salma Khallil
Senior Health Correspondent

Relax curbs or open borders, but not both

Source: The Straits Times, Page A30
Date: 31 October 2020

Experts say any easing of measures, whether internally or through border control, increases risks, and that Singapore could too soon relax if borders were not ready.

Salma Khallil
Senior Health Correspondent

As some experts now relax, fears of the second wave of infections heighten. If the situation continues, more countries will see the economy being hit hard, and the world will need to consider the broader implications of adopting a "second place" status.

"As of now, we advise against any travel, as the situation is too uncertain," a source said.

"Singapore must consider its borders, and the broader implications of adopting a "second place" status," the source added.

Source: The Straits Times © Singapore Press Holdings Ltd. Permission required for reproduction